
Introduction

One of the more significant changes in the ISO/IEC 17025:2017 standard are several requirements associated with the decision rule, which is defined as a "rule that describes how measurement uncertainty is accounted for when stating conformity with a specified requirement." While the standard requires all testing and calibration laboratories to address risks and opportunities, it does not provide specific approaches to meet these requirements.

This course provides guidance on how to select the appropriate decision rules and specifically guidance on how the required elements of a decision rule can be compiled when no standard published rules are available.

Who Should Attend

1. Quality Managers, Technical Managers, Laboratory Managers
2. Laboratory Personnel e.g. Technician, Analyst, Chemist, etc.
3. Quality Auditors, Laboratory Assessors & Consultants

Objectives

After completing this course, participants will be able to develop the decision rule when the laboratory's customer request for inclusion of a statement of conformity to the specification or standard in the test or calibration report.
